I've tried to help mentor and train fellow employees but Amazon's training is insufficient. The training given by Raymond was only on schematics and not on how to safely work and troubleshoot on the PIT, block up, shore, and safely work on all of the systems. I've witnessed a PIT mast elevated and the base jacked up, I've seen a PIT jacked up and fall into another PIT because the weight was too much and lost balance. Management is more focused on projects than properly train the employees. The safety issues I've brought up have been dismissed and not dealt with. I've been tasked to build a wall without having an engineer signing off on it. I have overseen the deceased on many occasions working on the PIT and performing the PM was a normal occurrence. He would frequently leave the job in the middle and have had to correct him on using the table saws. I want to see the safety culture in Amazon change and ensure the maintenance workers have the appropriate amount of training. There's no training there's no safety it's "get it done" and there not hiring the right people.
